Yoad M. Dvir is a hobbyist photographer who finds joy in small, quiet details, especially those offered by nature. He was born in 1982 in Israel and raised in a busy urban center. He currently works in artificial intelligence and cybersecurity. He also regularly speaks about emerging trends in technology.

Photography, for Yoad, is a way to slow down and notice what is often overlooked. He is drawn to moments of stillness, soft light, and the way natural forms bring beauty to everyday spaces. Much of his inspiration comes from small urban gardens and how nature quietly finds its place in city life.

Purple Irises and a Citrus Tree was taken one sunny morning in his rooftop garden. Over time, this space has become a quiet retreat—full of life, color, and calm moments that invite a second look. The photo was captured using a Samsung mobile phone, in a moment that felt simple and complete.
